ABOUT USES SHOP

History

The binder clip was invented by Louis E. Baltzley in Washington, D.C, 1910

At that time, the method of binding sheets of paper together was to punch holes in them and sew them together, making it tedious to remove a single sheet of paper.

Louis Baltzley invented the binder clip to help his father, Edwin Baltzley, a writer and inventor, hold his manuscripts together easily. While the original design has since been changed five times, the basic mechanism has remained the same.

Baltzley initially produced his invention through the L.E.B. Manufacturing Company. These earliest binder clips are stamped 'L.E.B.' on one side of the sheet steel. Manufacturing rights were later licensed to other companies.

Characteristics

A binder clip is a strip of spring steel bent into the shape of an isosceles triangle with loops at the apex.

Simple device for binding sheets of paper together.

It leaves the paper intact and can be removed quickly and easily, unlike the staple.
